ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This directory, compiled by Margaret Haley, could not have been accomplished without the help of all the individuals and organizations that contributed by giving us needed information and helpful editorial comments. We are especially grateful to the following: the Diabetes Control Program at the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta for sharing the results of its telephone survey, Diabetes Programs of State and Local Health Departments; Noreen H. Papatheodorou of the Diabetes Program at the UCLA Center for Health Sciences for letting us preview her draft manuscript, National Community Resource Guidelines for Diabetes Educators, to be published by the American Association of Diabetes Educators; many Federal agencies and offices, particularly the Clearinghouse on the Handicapped in the Office of Special Education and Rehabilitative Services, Department of Education, for helping us obtain information and materials; and NDIC Advisory Board members and members of the Diabetes Programs Branch in NIADDK for reviewing the manuscript and providing editorial suggestions.

INTRODUCTION

Purpose and Scope of the Directory

The National Diabetes Information Clearinghouse has compiled this directory to assist health care providers and the general public in obtaining information about programs for people with diabetes. Since diabetes is one of the conditions described in the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (P.L. 93-122) and its amendments, the person with diabetes is eligible for some specific Federal or state programs that offer medical or financial assistance.

Most of the programs are administered and implemented by the states, with each state determining specific services to be offered and eligibility requirements. Therefore, not every person with diabetes who needs the services of a given program will be able to receive them. Limited income is an eligibility requirement for some programs; age may be another criterion. Often the relative degree of disablement may determine whether an individual is eligible to use a program's services.

The directory has three sections: The first describes the major programs and their services, benefits, and eligibility requirements. These major programs are part of the network of health and social service activities within each state. Each state also has other Federal and state programs in its network that may assist those with diabetes, and some of these additional resources are described briefly at the end of this first section. The second section is an alphabetical directory by state of offices to contact for information about eligibility, specific services, and procedures for participating in the programs. Addresses and phone numbers are provided. The order of listings corresponds generally to the order of the program descriptions in the first section. The final section of the directory consists of appendices that list further resources including information services and voluntary and professional organizations.

In order to use this directory most efficiently, contact the local or regional offices for direct assistance, state agencies for referral and information, and the Federal numbers for further information.

I. DESCRIPTIONS OF PROGRAMS AND SERVICES OF MAJOR FEDERAL AND STATE RESOURCES

Federal programs that may provide assistance to people with diabetes include Medicare, Social Security Disability Insurance, and Supplemental Security Income.* A number of states have specific diabetes programs, some of them operated cooperatively with the Centers for Disease Control (CDC). Many states also supplement the renal disease provision of Medicare with state renal disease programs. Medicaid, Crippled Children's Services, vocational rehabilitation services, and services for the blind and visually impaired are joint Federal-state programs. Most of the programs are administered at the state level.

Medicare, Medicaid, and the state renal disease programs provide medical assistance, while direct financial aid is available through the Social Security Disability Insurance and Supplemental Security Income programs for eligible persons.

The services and eligibility requirements of these key programs are described here. However, the services mentioned are not all available in every state or territory, since each state tailors its programs and services to its unique needs and available resources.

Social Security Disability Insurance (SSDI) and Supplemental Security Income (SSI)

Federal Agency: Social Security Administration, Department of Health and Human Services

Authorization: SSDI: Social Security Act, Title II

SSI: Social Security Act, Title XVI

Types of Assistance: SSDI: Direct payments to disabled persons who meet Social Security work requirements for eligibility and their eligible dependents.

SSI: Direct payments to income-eligible aged, blind, and disabled persons without regard to prior employment.

Eligibility Requirements:

SSDI provides a partial replacement of monthly earnings to persons under 65 years of age who have a physical or mental condition which prevents them from being gainfully employed and who have earned a specified number of work credits under Social Security. The insured status requirements depend upon the age of the applicant and the date of disablement. Under the definition of disability in the Social Security law, disability benefits are provided when a person is unable to engage in substantial gainful activity by reason of medically determinable physical or mental impairment that has lasted or is expected to last at least 12 months or to result in death. Disabled spouses and dependent children of fully insured disabled workers also are eligible for disability benefits upon the retirement, disability, or death of the primary beneficiary. SSDI has a waiting period of 5 months before applicants qualify for benefits.

SSI is a financial assistance program that benefits needy disabled, blind, and aged individuals (or couples). Eligibility is based upon financial need. Income and personal resources are taken into account in the determination of eligibility. States may also elect to supplement the basic Federal SSI payments.

Description of Benefits:

Direct payments have unrestricted use. After 24 months of receiving benefits under SSDI, persons automatically qualify for hospital and medical insurance under Medicare. SSDI also reimburses state rehabilitation agencies for services that may help recipients return to remunerative employment. Both SSDI and SSI provide benefits to disabled children if they and their families meet eligibility requirements.

Information Resources:

STATE AND LOCAL: More than 1300 Social Security offices are responsible for processing applications and claims for SSDI and SSI programs. They are usually the best access points for eligibility information. Medicaid (Medical Assistance Program)

Federal Agency:	Health Care Financing Administration, Department of Health and Human Services
Authorization:	Social Security Act, Title XIX
Types of Assistance:	Medicaid is a joint Federal/state program which provides health care services to persons with low incomes in all states except Arizona and in Guam, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

Eligibility Requirements:

Eligibility for Medicaid is based on financial need. Physically or mentally handicapped persons with low incomes and needy aged and blind persons who may be eligible may apply to a state or local welfare agency for medical assistance. Each state designs its own Medicaid plan, determining specific services and eligibility requirements in accordance with Federal regulations. Every state must provide health care services for "categorically needy" persons such as (1) those receiving cash benefits under Aid for Dependent Children (AFDC) and (2) those receiving cash benefits under Supplemental Security Income (SSI) or meeting additional SSI conditions set by the particular state. States may also provide services for "medically needy" people whose incomes are higher than SSI or AFDC maximums but who cannot afford needed medical assistance. Eligibility requirements and services vary from state to state.

Description of Services:

States are required to provide the following services without charge to categorically-needy Medicaid recipients: inpatient hospital services (with certain exceptions); outpatient hospital services; laboratory and x-ray services; nursing home and home health services for persons over age 21; physician services; early periodic screening, diagnosis, and treatment (EPSDT) services for those under age 21; family planning services; and certain rural health clinic services. Optional services permitted if they are specified in the state plan include private duty nursing services; dental servies; physical or occupational therapy; prescribed drugs, dentures, prosthetic devices; eyeglasses; services of optometrists and podiatrists; and other medical or remedial services approved for the plan.

Information Resources:

STATE AND LOCAL: Inquiries about eligibility criteria and types of assistance should be directed to state Medicaid offices (See state directory, p. 35) or to state or local public assistance offices. Local or regional Social Security Administration offices can also supply information.

Medicare

Federal Agency: Health Care Financing Administration, Department of Health and Human Services

Authorization: Social Security Act, Title XVIII

Types of Assistance: Hospital and medical services

Eligibility Criteria:

Medicare is a Federal health insurance program available to persons 65 or over who qualify for Social Security or railroad retirement benefits, to certain disabled persons under 65, and to those with end-stage renal disease (see "Renal Disease Programs," p. 11). These persons are eligible for Medicare hospital insurance (Part A) and for voluntary enrollment in the supplementary medical insurance program (Part B), which requires a monthly premium. Persons age 65 or over not otherwise eligible for Medicare may participate in Medicare hospital insurance through payment of a monthly premium and also in Part B by paying the required premium.

Description of Services:

Medicare is divided into two programs: Part A, Hospital Insurance, and Part B, Medical Insurance. As with private insurance policies, Medicare benefits are restricted to particular services. In some cases, only a percentage of the total costs may be covered by Medicare. For a person to obtain Medicare benefits, his or her physician and hospital or skilled nursing facility must participate in the Medicare program since direct payments are made to the provider for medical services on behalf of eligible participants. Claims for payments are handled by private insurance organizations under contract with the Federal government.

Part A (Hospital Insurance) reimburses participating hospitals, nursing homes, and home health agencies for inpatient services and limited in-home services. For each hospital stay, there is a deductible paid by the beneficiary for the first 60 days and a daily charge for the 61st through 90th day. Major services covered by Part A include a semi-private room, all meals, regular nursing services, intensive care unit costs, drugs furnished by the hospital, laboratory tests and x-rays billed by the hospital, operating and recovery room costs, dialysis if one is a hospital inpatient, and rehabilitation services. Medicare covers some costs involving nursing homes and home health care. Physician services are not covered by Medicare Part A.

Part B (Medical Insurance) is a supplementary medical insurance program that may be voluntarily purchased by Medicare-eligible elderly and handicapped persons for a monthly premium. It reimburses 80% of the costs of physician and hospital outpatient services after an annual deductible. Major physician services covered by Part B include medical and surgical services, diagnostic tests, x-rays received as part of treatment, drugs that cannot be self-administered, and physical therapy. Major outpatient hospital services covered by Part B include emergency room and outpatient clinic services, home health visits not covered by Part A, laboratory tests and x-rays billed by the hospital, dialysis, rental or purchase of home dialysis equipment, and prosthetic devices.

Routine foot care by a podiatrist may be covered if a person with diabetes is under the care of a physician. Eyeglasses and insulin are not covered.

Medicare and Medicaid regulations may allow diabetes education and followup under the present cost reimbursement system when they are delivered at hospital outpatient departments and rural health clinics and are provided under the direction of a physician.

Renal Disease Programs

Federal Agency: Health Care Financing Administration, Department of Health and Human Services

Authorization: Social Security Act, Title XVIII

Types of Assistance: Benefits pertaining to end-stage renal disease

Eligibility Requirements:

Anyone enrolled in Medicare is entitled to the full range of Medicare benefits, including those for end-stage renal disease. Other people who have chronic kidney disease and require kidney dialysis or transplant are also eligible for coverage under the Medicare renal disease provision, regardless of age. Thirty-seven states also have renal programs which supplement Medicare. Eligibility requirements and services vary from state to state. For most state programs, eligibility is dependent upon the severity of the renal damage. Persons who do not qualify for Medicare benefits may be eligible for benefits under state programs.

Description of Services:

Under the renal disease provision of Medicare, dialysis services are covered in all settings: hospital, outpatient facilities, and patient's home. When dialysis takes place in the home, Medicare covers the rental or purchase of home dialysis equipment along with most supplies necessary for its effective use. Services available to transplant patients, as with all Medicare hospitalized patients, include inpatient hospital and physician services. Medicare also covers tissue typing and related services for both the recipient and donor. Transplant services terminate 36 months after the transplant unless the patient is back on dialysis.

Many states pay for portions of dialysis services, and most help cover costs of kidney transplants. Other services provided by various states include home dialysis training, equipment rental or purchase, physician fees, drugs, and laboratory fees.

Crippled Children's Services (CCS)

Federal Agency: Health Services Administration, Public Health Service, Department of Health and Human Services

Authorization: Social Security Act, as amended, Title V, Sec. 504

Types of Assistance: Medical and related services

Eligibility Requirements:

This program provides medical and related services to children under 21 who are either crippled or suffering from conditions that lead to crippling. A crippled child is defined in Sec. 504 as one "who has an organic disease, defect, or condition which may hinder the achievement of normal growth and development." Specific eligibility requirements are determined by each state. In many states, financial need is also a criterion. However, children not eligible for Medicaid, Social Security Disability Insurance, or Supplemental Security Income benefits may be eligible for CCS.

Description of Services:

The Health Services Administration makes formula grants to the states, which implement the program through the certified state crippled children's agencies. Each state has its own plan.

Vocational Rehabilitation Services and Services for the Blind and Visually Impaired

Federal Agency: Office of Special Education and Rehabilitative Services, Department of Education

Authorization: Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and amendments

Types of Assistance: Comprehensive vocational rehabilitation services including medical and therapeutic services and employment training and placement

Eligibility Requirements:

Vocational rehabilitation services are available to handicapped persons including the blind and visually impaired within each state. Thirty-three states have separate agencies for the blind. In the remaining 17 states and the District of Columbia, such services are available through the department of vocational rehabilitation.

Vocational rehabilitation services assist physically and mentally handicapped persons in achieving and maintaining employment. Thus, eligibility is dependent upon the severity of the handicap and the reasonable expectation that the individual will benefit from vocational rehabilitation in terms of employability. In some cases, financial need may be an eligibility factor. Specific eligibility requirements are determined by each state agency.

Description of Services:

Each state determines the types and extent of services provided. All states offer some degree of vocational and other training services including counseling, guidance, referral, placement services, and post-employment services. Vocational rehabilitation programs may assist financially for medical restorative services such as treatment or corrective surgery, hospitalization, prosthetic and orthotic devices, eyeglasses and visual services, and special services for individuals suffering from end-stage renal disease. Special services for the blind include reader services and orientation and mobility services.

State Diabetes Programs

Sponsoring Agency: Usually the state health department or the health department in cooperation with other state or Federal agencies

Types of Assistance: Variable

Eligibility: Varies by state and types of services offered.

Description of Services:

Most states provide some types of services or assistance that could benefit persons with diabetes. A recent telephone survey conducted by the Centers for Disease Control showed that 39 states provide diabetes activities or programs through state health departments and county or local health units. Additionally, other agencies within the states provide diabetes-related services or assistance. For states without specifically defined diabetes programs, the state, territorial, or local health department may be contacted for referral to other agencies.

The following capsule descriptions are meant only to illustrate the range and types of services and assistance available through state diabetes programs.

Connecticut, Florida, Nebraska, Kansas, North Carolina, New Jersey, and Kentucky have specific diabetes programs administered by or coordinated with the state health department. The Connecticut and Florida programs, associated with their states' Crippled Children's Services programs, are restricted to those under 21.

The Connecticut Diabetes Program is part of the Health Services for Handicapped Children

Section of the State Department of Health Services. Children eligible for CCS receive services free of charge; families of children not eligible for CCS are charged according to scale. Medical and counseling services as well as educational programs are available.

The Florida Diabetes Program is part of the Children's Medical Services Program (CCS) of the State Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services. All children eligible for CCS may take advantage of the diabetes program. The state is divided into three regions, with each region the responsibility of one of three medical schools at the University of Florida, University of South Florida, and University of Miami. Throughout the year, a team of health care professionals from each medical school travels around each region conducting seminars for health educators and clinics for patients. A medical checkup and a counseling session are provided for each child. Paients of private physicians may attend the clinic for a minimum charge. In addition, Florida provides 24-hour telephone consultation to all patients, families, and health personnel. This round-the-clock service is the responsibility of a diabetes nurse specialist. When necessary, calls are referred to the patient's physician.

The Kansas State Department of Health and Welfare actively supports programs in diabetes detection and education. The main resources are the University of Kansas School of Medicine (UKSM), through the Kansas Regional Diabetes Center, and the American Diabetes Association Kansas Affiliate. The diabetes center in turn works closely with Wichita State University and Kansas State University. The multidisciplinary teams of the center are available at UKSM-Kansas City and UKSM-Wichita for patient, public, and/or professional services 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. Specific activities of the teams are consultation, counseling, education, and communications. Nurses, physicians, and other health professionals make up the communications network. The team is also developing satellites for diabetes education to bring the services closer to more people in Kansas.

The Kansas programs include professional conferences held three or more times a year, a series of intensive education programs for patients and their families, and continuing education for physicians and other health personnel.

In North Carolina, several diabetes projects are being carried out under the sponsorship of the Department of Human Resources, Division of Health Services. These projects emphasize both diabetes and glaucoma, with the major emphasis on diabetes. Each county develops its program somewhat differently depending upon the community structure, resources, and needs; however, the emphasis is on teaching and followup. In the seven project counties, group diabetes classes for newly diagnosed patients are conducted throughout the year, with public health nurses serving as consultants on diabetes management. Screening projects for at-risk groups are also carried out. Services are free.

Two states with major diabetes programs, New Jersey and Kentucky, recently joined the CDC cooperative diabetes project.

Part of the Chronic Disease Section of the State Department of Health, the New Jersey Diabetes Control Program, is primarily concerned with education. It provides consultation to diabetes patients and health educators and also makes educational materials, literature, and films available. In addition, the New Jersey program supports symposia and educational programs for health care professionals and offers financial assistance for the training of counselors and nurses employed by a summer camp for diabetic children.

The Kentucky Diabetes Program--a university-based clinical, developmental, and educational program--is operated through cooperative arrangements with the Kentucky Bureau for Health Services and the Kentucky Diabetes Association. The program sponsors regional and statewide seminars for health professionals and regional patient education workshops.

The program maintains a model patient referral, education, and care component at the University of Kentucky which includes psychological, social, podiatric, rehabilitative, and educational services as well as physician, nursing, and nutritional care. Model teaching materials for health professionals and patient teaching materials specifically designed for patients with different learning aptitudes are being developed.

Twenty states are currently funded through cooperative agreements with the Centers for Disease Control to conduct community-based diabetes control programs. These are California, Colorado, Georgia, Illinois, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Utah, and Washington. In the planning phase of these programs, the states collect and assess baseline morbidity, mortality, and care resource data; establish a framework for improving coordination of community resources; and develop a plan of action for improving control of diabetes. This plan is implemented during the second, or intervention, phase. Intervention strategies in these states are aimed at reducing hospitalizations, amputations, coma, and premature death among defined populations.

Wide variation exists in the types of diabetes services and activities which are being planned or implemented in the CDC control programs. For example, Nebraska is conducting intensive in-home patient education to supplement hospital-based programs in conjunction with home health agencies and county health departments. In Illinois, the state health department and the NIH-supported Diabetes Research and Training Center at Washington University, St. Louis, cooperate to provide a diabetes education program to hospital-based educators who directly serve patients. South Carolina is establishing a statewide system of diabetes nurse specialists to coordinate health care services. Educational programs and counseling services are also provided.

In addition to diabetes-specific services offered by the various states, most health departments conduct other activities of benefit to persons with diabetes, such as Risk Reduction Programs, Maternal and Child Health Programs, Nutrition Services, and programs for the aged. As part of these services, the needs of the person with diabetes may be considered. For example, Michigan Department of Health, through Title III of the Older Americans Act, provides health screening, home health care, information and referral services, and other services for the elderly. Thus, people who qualify by age and income can receive assistance for diabetes-specific problems. Under Title VII of the same act, meals are provided for elderly persons at various community locations, although the meals program cannot necessarily fulfill diabetic dietary requirements. The Pennsylvania Department of Health assists at-risk mothers, infants, and children through Improved Pregnancy Outcome projects, Maternity and Infant Care projects, and the Women, Infants, and Children's (WIC) program.

These are only a few examples of the efforts of state and local health departments to coordinate and intervene through diabetes control programs.

This is a series of programs designed to promote the health and well-being of mothers and infants, especially those at high risk. Emphasis is placed on early identification of children in need of health care and treatment. Various educational, preventive, and medical services are provided through the programs. As with programs under Crippled Children's Services, MCH programs are included in state plans for the utilization of Title V (Social Security Act) funds. They include Maternity and Infant Care projects, Improved Pregnancy Outcome projects, Children and Youth projects, and Improved Child Health Delivery System projects. State or local health departments can be contacted for information.

The WIC program provides specified nutritious supplemental foods to pregnant, postpartum, and breastfeeding women and to infants and children up to their fifth birthday who are determined to be at nutritional risk because of inadequate nutrition and inadequate income. Funds are distributed to participating state health departments or comparable agencies which in turn distribute them to participating local agencies. The program includes nutrition education by a registered dietitian. Contact local health or welfare agencies for information about the program.

The centers provide core research facilities and short-term support for pilot and feasibility studies. Each DRTC also has special education or information activities such as a model care demonstration unit that is used both for research and for training, education, and information programs. The type and scope of these information programs vary according to local needs and opportunities and may relate to any component of the health care system. Locations of the DRTCs are given below.

NEI has primary responsibility within the National Institutes of Health and the Federal government for supporting and conducting basic and clinical research to improve the prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of visual disorders, including ocular complications of diabetes. The NEI-sponsored Diabetic Retinopathy Study, a nationwide clinical trial, demonstrated that photocoagulation--treatment with powerful beams of light--can reduce the risk of blindness from diabetic retinopathy. Another clinical trial, the Early Treatment Retinopathy Study, is now in progress. Information about these studies, including lists of participating centers and investigators, may be obtained from the above address. Rockville, MD 20857

Some 788 CMHCs are located around the country to provide a variety of mental health services to individuals in their own communities. Services are available to everyone regardless of the ability to pay and include inpatient and outpatient care, emergency treatment, screening services, partial hospitalization, followup and transitional care, and consultation and education programs. CMHCs also provide services targeted for children, the elderly, and those who abuse drugs or alcohol. One hundred and ten CMHCs have special linkages with community health centers in recognition of the close relationship between many physical and emotional problems. Further information about CMHCs can be obtained by writing to NIMH Public Inquiries at the above address. Local health departments can provide information about local CMHC services.

The IHS provides comprehensive health care services to American Indians and Alaska Natives through a network of hospitals and other health care facilities. Services include maternal and child health programs, diabetes education programs, nutrition programs, and programs on aging. Diabetes education, prevention, and control are especially emphasized in IHS health programs, since some Indian groups, most notably the Pima tribe in Arizona, are at high risk for the disorder.

The VA provides a wide range of benefits to eligible veterans and their dependents and beneficiaries. Its programs include medical care, rehabilitation, and financial assistance. It promotes cooperative studies of various medical problems, including diabetes, and emphasizes patient education, especially in hypertension and diabetes. VA field offices are located in many cities throughout the U.S. Federal Benefits for Veterans and Dependents, available free from all VA offices, describes benefits, services, and eligibility requirements and lists local offices and treatment facilities by state.

CLEARINGHOUSES AND OTHER INFORMATION SERVICES

National Diabetes Information
Clearinghouse (NDIC)
Westwood Building, Room 603
Bethesda, MD 20205
(301) 496-7433
(202) 842-7630

A service of the National Institute of Arthritis, Diabetes, and Digestive and Kidney Diseases, NDIC promotes the exchange of diabetes information among private and public groups involved in diabetes educational programs for professionals, patients, and the public. Primary users are health care professionals. The clearinghouse publishes and distributes annotated bibliographies of professional and patient materials and a newsletter, Diabetes Dateline; initiates the preparation of new materials; sponsors scientific workshops and conferences; and responds to inquiries about sources of diabetes information.

Clearinghouse on the Handicapped
Department of Education
Room 3106, Switzer Building
Washington, DC 20202
(202) 245-0080

The clearinghouse responds to inquiries directly or makes referrals to other sources on a wide range of topics concerning handicapping conditions and related services, especially Federal legislation and Federal funding of programs for the handicapped. Its publications include a bimonthly newsletter, Programs for the Handicapped. The Directory of National Information Sources on Handicapping Conditions and Related Services (236 pp.) describes the scope and services of numerous organizations, agencies, and clearinghouses. There is no charge for the clearinghouse's services or publications.

High Blood Pressure Information
Center (HBPIC)
National High Blood Pressure
Education Program
120/80 National Institutes of Health
Bethesda, MD 20205
(301) 652-7700

This information center is part of the National High Blood Pressure Education Program, supported by the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute. It collects, evaluates, and disseminates information on hypertension. Materials include fact sheets, reports, and bibliographies. HBPIC responds to written or telephoned inquiries from individuals and organizations. There is no charge for its services.

National Clearinghouse for Mental Health Information (NCMHI)
National Institute of Mental Health
Public Inquiries Section
5600 Fishers Lane
Rockville, MD 20857
(301) 443-4517

NCMHI collects, processes, and disseminates scientific information about mental health. Users include the mental health community, private and lay organizations, and government agencies. The clearinghouse operates a mental health library, prepares scientific publications, and answers general inquiries from the public. A publications list is available, and single copies of most publications are sent upon request. Computer printouts of individual bibliographic searches are available to professionals without charge.

National Clearinghouse on Aging
Administration on Aging
330 Independence Avenue, S.W., Room 4146
Washington, DC 20201
(202) 245-2158

Sponsored by the Administration on Aging (AoA), the clearinghouse collects, analyzes, and disseminates information on the problems of the aging. It responds to inquiries by sending fact sheets, bibliographies, and other publications or by making referrals to other information centers or direct service providers. A brochure entitled To Find the Way outlines major sources of assistance for older Americans. A bibliographic information system called SCAN, the Service Center for Aging Information, is now being developed, along with a resource center for collecting and processing documents. AoA is the principal Federal agency concerned with administering programs of the Older Americans Act and promoting coordination of Federal resources available to meet the needs of older persons.

National Health Information
Clearinghouse (NHIC)
P.O. Box 1133
Washington, DC 20013
(800) 336-4797
(703) 522-2590 in Virginia

The clearinghouse is a project of the Office of Health Information, Health Promotion, and Physical Fitness and Sports Medicine in the Department of Health and Human Services. It assists the public in locating specific sources of health information. Inquiries can be made by toll-free telephone or by mail. A directory describing 76 resources, Health Information Resources in the Department of Health and Human Services, is free upon request (include a self-addressed mailing label). NHIC does not provide medical advice or referral to physicians.

National Library Service for the Blind and Physically Handicapped
Library of Congress
1291 Taylor Street, N.W.
Washington, DC 20542
(202) 287-5100

Through a network of 160 local cooperating libraries and agencies, NLS distributes braille and talking books/magazines (with playback equipment). Blind and physically handicapped persons who wish to borrow materials may contact NLS for the location of the nearest cooperating library. There is no charge. Music books and periodicals are also available directly from NLS in braille, large print, and recorded formats. NLS's reference section answers inquiries of individuals, organizations, and libraries on blindness and physical handicaps. Information packages about sections 503 and 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, the role of teachers and parents of handicapped or blind chidren, and other topics are available.

National Rehabilitation Information
Center (NARIC)
The Catholic University of America
4407 Eighth Street, N.E.
Washington, DC 20064
(202) 635-5822

NARIC is a rehabilitation research library of reports, books, and audiovisual materials relevant to all disability groups. Funded by the National Institute of Handicapped Research, Department of Health and Human Services, the center facilitates the exchange of information about rehabilitation issues, statistics, needs, and resources. It publishes a bimonthly subscription newsletter, The Pathfinder. Prepared bibliographies on specialized topics and a list of the library's journal and newsletter holdings are available without charge. Fees are charged for customized searches of the center's computerized data base and photocopying of documents in the library collection. NARIC provides reference services, and the public may consult its collection.

Appendix C

NATIONAL VOLUNTARY AND PROFESSIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

American Diabetes Association (ADA)
2 Park Avenue
New York, NY 10016
(212) 683-7444

ADA supports diabetes research and legislative advocacy activities and professional, patient, and public education programs. Its members include both professional and lay persons. It operates through 67 affiliates and numerous local chapters throughout the U.S. (See Appendix D, p. 87, for a listing of affiliates.) Patient education programs include monthly meetings, seminars, summer camps, speaker programs, and hotlines. ADA publishes lay and professional pamphlets and books, and local chapters provide information and referral services. Its bimonthly Diabetes Forecast is directed toward patients and their families. ADA also conducts professional seminars and scientific meetings and publishes two professional journals, Diabetes and Diabetes Care.

Juvenile Diabetes Foundation (JDF)
23 E. 26th Street
New York, NY 10010
(212) 889-7575

JDF, an international voluntary agency, supports diabetes research aimed at preventing the complications of diabetes and curing the disease itself. It sponsors scientific conferences, workshops, and symposia; awards research grants and fellowships; and actively influences and supports legislation relating to diabetes. JDF also publishes and distributes free pamphlets and fact sheets about diabetes. Local chapters conduct fund raising activities and provide parent-to-parent counseling and other support for newly diagnosed patients and their families. Some chapters provide diabetes hotlines. (See Appendix E, p. 93, for a list of JDF chapters.)

American Association of Diabetes
Educators (AADE)
N. Woodbury Road
Box 56
Pitman, NJ 08071
(609) 589-4831

AADE is a professional organization that promotes the continuing development of quality diabetes education and the cooperation of all organizations involved in diabetes patient education. It publishes a quarterly journal, Diabetes Educator, a newsletter, and educational materials. AADE members include nurses, dietitians, social workers, physicians, pharmacists, and podiatrists. In addition to an annual meeting, AADE holds a regional conference each year. (See Appendix F, p. 103, for chapter listing.)

American Dietetic Association (ADA)
430 North Michigan Avenue
Chicago, IL 60611
(312) 280-5000

This professional association promotes education in the fields of dietetics and nutrition and publishes a monthly journal, The Journal of the American Dietetic Association. The association sets and approves standards of education and experience through dietetic traineeships, internships, and graduate programs.

15 West 16th Street
New York, NY 10011
(212) 620-2000

AFB promotes the development of educational, rehabilitative, and social welfare services for the blind. It supports technological research, produces and sells devices to aid the blind, records and manufactures talking books, and produces pamphlets and films about blindness. AFB public education materials in print format are free. The foundation also provides legislative consultation and advisory services to government and voluntary agencies. Its publications include the Directory of Agencies Serving the Visually Handicapped in the United States, the International Guide to Appliances for Blind and Visually Impaired Persons, the Journal of Visual Impairment and Blindness, and a quarterly newsletter. A catalog of publications is available upon request.

American Heart Association (AHA)
7320 Greenville Avenue
Dallas, TX 75231
(214) 750-5414

AHA gathers and disseminates information on all aspects of cardiovascular disease and stroke including risk factors, early warning signs, and high blood pressure. It also supports public education and community programs. AHA's 2,000 local affiliates act as referral agencies to direct services in the community such as cardiac and stroke rehabilitation centers and diet workshops.

National Association for Visually
Handicapped (NAVH)
305 East 24th Street, 17-C
New York, NY 10010
(212) 889-3141

NAVH acts as a clearinghouse and referral agency for public and private services for the visually handicapped. The association prints and distributes large print books and has a free loan library of large print books. It publishes a large print newsletter and provides information about commercially available large print publications and optical aids.

National Association of Patients on Hemodialysis and Transplantation (NAPHT)
505 Northern Boulevard
Great Neck, NY 11021
(516) 482-2720

Through 30 local chapters, the organization informs the public and patients about kidney diseases, treatments, and patient rights issues. It also supports self-help and community awareness programs. Free pamphlets available from the national office include Living with Renal Failure, Renal Failure and Diabetes, Dialysis Worldwide for the Traveling Patient, and State Renal Programs.

National Federation of the Blind (NFB)
1800 Johnson Street
Baltimore, MD 21230
(301) 659-9314

A membership organization with state and local chapters, NFB provides educational and advocacy services for the blind. Its National Blindness Information Center answers questions about blindness and the rights of the blind by telephone or mail.

National Kidney Foundation
2 Park Avenue
New York, NY 10016
(212) 889-2210

Through its 53 affiliates, the foundation supports programs in treatment, research, and education for the public and professionals. NKF sponsors an organ donor program, screening and detection programs, and referral and information activities.

National Rehabilitation Association
(NRA)
1522 K Street, N.W.
Suite 1120
Washington, DC 20005
(202) 659-2430

This membership organization supports rehabilitation services through advocacy for state and Federal legislation, professional development, continuing education, and public education activities. The NRA has 7 divisions and 50 state chapters which disseminate professional information to those working in specific rehabilitation fields. It publishes the Journal of Rehabilitation and a newsletter.

National Society to Prevent Blindness
(NSPB)
79 Madison Avenue
New York, NY 10016
(212) 684-3505

The society sponsors community screening programs, public and professional education, and research with the aim of detecting, controlling, or preventing blindness and other eye problems. NSPB answers mail queries and publishes brochures and pamphlets. A catalog of publications and films is available.
